What is retirement?

Retirement is a new beginning which affects both you, the retiree, and your family and friends equally.

For some, the prospect is welcome, others may be less sure. Whatever your feelings, life will change as new opportunities emerge and, at long last, you regain full control. No more deadlines, targets or 'mission statements' unless they are set by you for your own reasons and to your own standards. While personal responsibilities may remain, even they change and there is a new freedom to choose how you conduct your life.

As in any fresh venture, retirement is a time when new skills and attitudes need to be developed. Relationships, habits and long held assumptions may need to be reviewed and ideas and points of view from other people's experience considered. New information is required, plans need to be outlined and decisions made.

When you retire from your company it is the start of another life which may last 20, 30 even 40 years! How often have you said to yourself 'If I were to start again, what would I do?' Albeit a bit late and with perhaps a new set of ambitions, that is what retirement can offer.

RCS retirement seminars for senior executives provide the forum where relevant information is available and ideas and the implications of retirement can be explored.

About RCS and the seminars

For over 30 years we have been presenting seminars designed to provide real practical help in assisting people make the transition from full-time work towards retirement, recognising that not all who retire necessarily wish to stop working.

RCS Open Retirement Seminars provide the relaxed environment needed to explore these issues and the personal implications of retirement. They also allow time to look at the practical concerns while subject experts provide the relevant factual information.

Our Aim Whilst the challenges and opportunities of retirement will mean different things to different people we aim to make the seminars informative, stimulating and most importantly enjoyable. Providing the opportunity to share concerns, points of view and aspirations with your peers in pleasant surroundings.

Our Approach

The style is informal and conversational. Seminars are co-ordinated by our full-time Counsellors supported by a team of specialists selected for their technical knowledge and presentational skills.

Health, benefits, taxation, pensions, investments are all covered. As we have no connection with the financial services industry our expert finance speakers are able to inform from an uninvolved, neutral standpoint.

Whilst recognising that sound financial planning is important we realise that money alone will not ensure a fulfilling retirement. Relationships, personal concerns and ambitions are equally important and are addressed in the seminars.

Who should attend?

Senior executives who are considering retiring, from their main career, in the next few years.

The seminars are designed specifically for executives, senior managers and other professionals. Couples are always encouraged to attend together because each will have their own questions and perspectives to consider.

“A course both my wife and I felt had achieved all (and more) than we hoped for”

“Lively, stimulating, interactive sessions which definitely helped to focus the mind”

“Course more than met expectations and was very enjoyable”
